SOUTH CAROLINA MONEY. We will take South Carolina money at par in payment for subscriptions to the PATRIOT.

THE POOR-HOW SHALL THEY BE RE LIEVED!-The cold, chilling winds admonish us that winter is fast approaching, and let what may be done for the poor and destitute, they are bound to suffer greatly during the next few months. Previsions of all kinds will be scarce, fuel will be difficult to procure, and there will be hundreds in our midst who will have no money with which to buy. There is a large class in the city whose wants sholud receive the timely attention of those who have enough for themselves and something to spare; and in reflecting upon the best method of taking care of them through the winter, we have convinced ourselves that a considerable fund may be raised for that purpose without taxing the generosity of a few who will perhaps have calls upon their charity beyond their ability to meet with justice to themselves. The plan which we beg leave to suggest to those who feel an interest in the subject, will enable all who are happily beyond the reach of want to contribute something, and at the same time will turnish them a pleasant and profitable entertainment for what they give. We would suggest as that plan, that a course of public lectures be instituted, the lectures to be delivered in the different churches of the city, one each week during the winter, or as long as it may be thought proper to continue them. We are sure that there are many gentlemen of education in Nashville who would cherrfully lend their aid to an enterprise which appeals so strongly to our sympathies, and by placing the price of admission at a low figure, say 25 cents, the largest church in the city could be filled each night, and a handome sum realized for the relief of the desfitute. -We sh ll refer to this subject again. In the mean time, we trust there are others who will take the matter in hand and see that it is carried out.

MISS ADALINA PATTI'S FIRST CONCERT .-STRAKOSCH Troupe came off last night, and beautiful women-it has been many and many a day since there has been so resplendent a star upon the stage here to call out "the brave and the beautiful."

After a fine overture by the Orchestra, and an ariar from "The Barber of Seville" by with her dark eyes eloquent with that inarticulate melody which wins the most cold and unimpressible heart from its dream of apathy, tripped down to the foot-lights with a step as light and noiseless as the fall of a for the first time since her childhood, we heard that voice which is as soft and sweet as that of a bright hope breaking in upon the despairing soul and winning it back to the light and beauty of its own green land, All this may be imagined—it is not wholly beyond the power of the pen to describe,but when we come to Miss Patti's singingsuch singing as the olden sailors heard as their frail barque rose and fell with the billow off the fatal isle of the Siren-when we turn from the rich array of bright eyes and fair forms in the boxes, the extree of the beautiful and bewitching vocalist, and the apthe gas and retire.

The Dubuque Herald, in speaking of unhappy marriages, says-"We know a case In this city, in which the parties are a young man, the son of a respectable family; the wife a beautiful, sensible woman, whom he married agout a year since. It is a fact notorious to every one in the vicinity, that for the last six or ten months the latter has led a life compared to which the worst slavery of the harem would be a blessing. Time and again has he felled her to the floor in a transport of jealousy, and for weeks she has not been for a moment from under his espionage, At other times he has torn every strip of clothing from her body, then lashed her as he would a naked hound. There are a thousand other indignities perpetrated by him upon the wife, which we cannot mention-suffice that they are of a character which would cause the bronzed cheek of the worst villain in arson or murder business to deepen in color from indignation and disgust."

Why don't some of the friends of that "beautiful, sensible woman" take that g man, the son of a respectable family," by the nap of the neck and jerk the life out of him?

"Judge Douglas," says a Washington correspondent, "had some rare escapes during his Southern tour, as I learn from good authority. It is stated that at least one attempt was made to throw the train off the a flendish plan was conceived to blow him up on the steamboat Duke." Do you reckon Man," "The Stork," "The Blind Child,"

A BELT WORTH TWO OF THE CHAMPION'S .-Among the "rurnish" sold off among the effects of an old gentleman who was murdered by his servant at St Germain-en-Lays, France, recently, was an old belt, which on being opened was found to contain bills, amounting to 15,000 francs.

TO SOUTH CAROLINA. BY OUR POSTICAL SDITOR

Amid the storm, with day and sunlight fading. The ships are sailing you dark ocean o'er; The spectre clouds, smid the tempest wailing, The sun, the moon, and all the stars, are salling In you broad upper deep forever more. But through the storm a beacon-light is halling Those ships to guide them to the tranquil shore : There is a haven where the clouds may sleep; There is a haven for the moon and sun ;

For all the planets in the upper deep,

There is a haven when their voyage is done I Tipu, too, sail on, OI most rantaukerous State Dur steer not then toward you Secession port. For the you'd find, and find it out too late, it is with all the freaks of Fate), That Wreck and Ruin hold piratic court!

What if the sharks that follow in thy wake, And round thee cluster, basking in the sun, Thy colored sailors seem inclined to take, You know full well they've never gotten one; While from toy sisters of the Union fleet, They take a number almost every day ; But they, than thou more steady and discreet, Still keep the peaceful tenor of their way.

Heed not, I beg, each saucy shark that w.pes

His silmy scales on thy palmetto prow ;

He cannot touch the glorious stars and stripes

That float so proudly from thy mast-head now Then sail thou on, 0 ! fire-devouring State ! Don't make a fool of your own precious self; Nor rush headlong upon the shouls of Fate; Don't break your crockery-don't smash you

Nor snap the chords of Hail Columbia's lyre, Because things don't work just as you desire! Drink, it you will, Rebellion's fearful cup, Live, if you choose, on burning coals of fire, And if you want to, breakfast, dine and sup On maccaroni made of red-hot wire ;

But do not bust this glorious Union up, Nor gaff the eagle standing proudly by her-At least, until you must in self-defence ; And when you must, then wade, O ! lemons ! in-Draw to the conflict all your next of kin-And snatch the U. G. R. R. scamps from whence And let them know their game can never win!

But till you must, there's not a grain of sense In kicking up an everlasting din, When you must know it's at your own expense. Wait for the wagon-let Abe take the "cheer," and when he gives the South some lawless thrus

"Commits an overt act"-why, then adjust Your sindal-shoon, without repreach or fear, And quit the Union in "one grand disgust !" November 20, 1860.

OUR NEW TEMPERANCE EDITOR-WE TRY HIM-HE FAILS-WE DISMISS HIM .- We find it very difficult to secure the valuable services of a competent Temperance Editor. There are plenty of temperance men in the ountry; but they either do not want the position, or they do want the ability to discharge its duties. Our New One has failed at the very outset. On reading the following-his first attempt-which we found on the copy-hook yesterday, we at once procured a writ of habeus corpus and had him removed from the post; in short, we dismissed him. Our Temperance Editor must be a man him to look upon the wine when it is red, or

But yesterday the condition of building contained so brilliant an array of things around us-the prospect of secession among the Cotton States and the impending monetary crisis in all the States, both Cotton and Woollen, weighed upon our spirits like a large lump of lead, and the pen in our unnerved hand was weaker than the sword in the bands of infancy; and having learned Signor ETTORE BARILI, the little enchantress, from many reliable sources that Douglas & WALSH keep the finest wines and liquors that can be had for love or money, and that WAR-NER is the most skillful band to dish up such things in the South-West, we went around and called for a sherry cobbler, not knowing snow-flake, amid a storm of applause, and whether that beverage is now in out of season. We paid for it and drank it. We felt better. Our spirits rose like bubbles in glass of Sparkling Catawba, and we did n't care who goes out of the Union, nor who stays in it. The pressure in the money market was gone, and we could have lent a man a thousand dollars just as easy as fifty cents. With these few salutatory remarks, we enter upon the discharge of our pleasing duties as the New Temperance Editor of the

On Thursday evening, the Melodeon was crowded by one of the best audiences we have seen for a long time, and to-night we advise our friends to go early. A more splendid thing of the kind we never witnessed. The Sepoy rebellion as it is called, is finely illustrated by moving figures of men, women, horses, elephants, camels, etc., and the scenery of the country by a Diorama of exceeding beauty. A scene on the battle field, where a wounded horse, in vain essays to aid his wounded master, is alone worth the price of admission. So true to nature does it appear, that it is hard to divest one's self of the idea that the noble animal is not one of real life, flesh and blood. The whole is well calculated to amuse and at the same time instruct, and we advise all who have families to gather their little ones around them, and visit it. Young and old should alike pay it a visit, for an hour cannot well be spent more profitably by the amusement hunting public.
